What would you give to have a paper in Hayti? How many times, in the death of the old Hayti Signal in 1897 and the "nine lives" of the Argus from 1898 to 1907, has Hayti felt the need of a paper? In all the bad experiences in the past with the newspapers there has been a cause—there have arisen factions and feelings that never should have been. Probably both sides have been to blame—in some instances. We sometimes see outcroppings of that same old spirit now. But the experiences of the past should teach our people the wiser plan. Generally, we cannot hurt others without hurting ourselves, and it is very certain that we cannot hurt any business enterprise in the town without hurting the whole town. There is no such thing as "getting even." Spite and envy cannot be satisfied. Every effort in that direction sinks the maker of it just that much lower. We cannot all agree on everything. In business and in public matters personal feeling should never be manifest. It is a fact, however, that there are people in every town who would tear down the town and every institution in it in a vain effort to gratify some little personal whim and thereby do themselves and their neighbors untold injury. This is not the spirit of the Herald. The Herald is here to work for the general good of the town, regardless of who is benefited. We have no "ax to grind," no friends to pet and no enemies to punish, but can deal out equal fairness and justice to all. The Herald is not, never has been and never will be a TOOL. The Herald is its own boss, and what it thinks to be right and for the best interest of Hayti it will do, and our large and growing subscription list shows that the masses of the people are with us, and that the Herald is too strongly established to go the way of its predecessor. We need and deserve, however, a better general patronage; we need more and better paying advertising, more job printing, etc., in fact, our patronage should be sufficient to enable us to hire a printer and put in a part of our time on the outside. Subscriptions alone will not pay for producing the paper, and on account of our limited income from other sources, to hold the paper up we have been compelled to work night and day to produce it, without any opportunity to get out to look after news or business matters. This explains why the paper neglects so many things, but we can do no better than our support enables us to do. It would pay every merchant in Hayti to make a yearly contract for a liberal amount of space and go to work now to advertising and boosting the town; show the outside world what the town is, have hundreds of the papers sent to your friends and acquaintances, and try to encourage and assist the paper to be better. There is a turning point just ahead for Hayti, if we will take hold now and be ready for it when it comes. You will then need the Herald and it will be here, to be sure, but after a long period on half rations we may be somewhat like the old farm horse taken off the cane in the spring to make a crop.

The Morehouse Hustler is one of those one-idea papers. Now, it is perfectly satisfactory to us for the Hustler to have its own opinion, and it would not be worth a continental if it did not have, but one thing certain about it, the Hustler will have to accord others the same rights it asks for itself. The world could hardly stand if everybody were of the same opinion, had the same mind and feeling and thought and acted alike. In that state, we would retrograde and decline more than to any dark age of the past. There have been times in the world's history when people were persecuted and even burned at the stake because they did not believe or do a certain way. This same spirit is in the world today. But through all ages there have lived a sufficient number of broad, liberal-minded people to preserve the affairs of men in tact, to forget oppression, tyranny, wars and bloodshed and to strive on for the advancement and elevation of the human race, which can only be accomplished and preserved by an equilibrium of things that foster and protect free thought and free speech and to retard selfishness, jealousy, envy, and spite. Of course we have this class with us and they will continue with us as long as time. We cannot remedy this defect with which nature has endowed them, but we must tolerate them and let them continue in their narrow confines. This is not all for the Hustler, however.

The Hayti Herald is in trouble for having had the courage to speak its sentiments on the Kennett local option election. Several subscribers have quit the paper. The Herald is better off without them. Tell 'em to go to L; that you are running the Herald.

—Portageville Critic.
Now to set matters right, the Herald is not now and never has been in trouble or the least bit bothered on account of losing a subscriber for having expressed an opinion or told the truth. That is a part of newspaper experience. So far as we are aware, however, up to present, since the paper has been running, and we have been threatened for expressing an opinion on many things, we have lost but ONE subscriber on that account. That was the one mentioned last week, who lives over at Caruthersville, and it looks plausible that he was over excited because he realizes that if Caruthersville retains her saloons, which she certainly will, there is a strong probability that the county will go wet at the next election, and that would hurt his "business." See the point! The advertiser we lost was one of the "wettest" men in Hayti, so two extremes met.

It is not the custom with the Hayti Herald, and never has been, to furnish the paper free to advertisers, any more than it is for the merchant to give you a dollar's worth of something free when you buy a bill of goods. Our advertising rates are one thing, and subscription is another, except in certain kinds of professional cards, payable in advance for six months. Every citizen should pay for his home paper and show by that act that he considers it worth $1.00 to the town, if not to himself.

EXCHANGE
NOTES

Cape Democrat: The Frisco will expend $20,000 in advertising the advantages of Missouri lands. The money will not all be expended on the hilly Ozark country either. The Frisco is quite as vitally interested in the development of Southeast Missouri as in any other region it touches, and there is an other reason which the immigration agents of the road cannot ignore: They will find it twice as easy to attract settlers to the rich lands of Southeast Missouri as to the Ozarks.

The person who refuses to subscribe and pay for the local paper has no right to ask for its space for notice or for the publication of any other matter. Such a person is never worth anything to a local paper and has no claims on its space any more than he would to ask a merchant with whom he does not trade to give him his goods.—Ex.
